HE WAS CRIME'S VICTIM.

How a Millionaire Compelled a Bank Clerk to Steal.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

One of the queerest crimes in history—Samuel C. Seelye Has Served Five Years in the Penitentiary—One of the Principals Committed Suicide.

Out of Kings County Penitentiary in Brooklyn, N. Y., recently, after more than five years' servitude, stepped the victim of one of the queerest crimes in history—a man who stole $354,000 for the accommodation of another whom he scarcely knew, in whose house he had never been, whom he never cared for and whom eventually he hated. While columns have been written about the instrument by which this crime was committed, little has been said concerning the master mind which planned the looting of the Shoe and Leather Bank, and under the impetus of which Samuel C. Seelye was no more than a wooden puppet.

Frederick Baker was a man of middle height and more than middle age, rotund, well dressed, with gray hair and a rosy face. A large landowner and a reputed millionaire, he yet was beginning to feel the pinch of embarrassment. He kept an open account with the Shoe and Leather Bank, and happened to deal with Seelye because the latter had charge of the ledgers from A to K.

It all followed Baker's carelessness in writing out checks for $1,100 more than his account was good for, and Seelye, accustomed to handling his orders for considerable sums, let them go through. When Seelye found it out next day he was a badly frightened man. The thing that he should have done was to have reported the matter instantly to the president, but that might have entailed a reprimand, and Seelye was too weak a man to face his chief's displeasure. Moreover, he understood by report that Baker was a man of wealth, and it did not occur to him that such a suave, white haired, well dressed old gentleman could be a rascal. So he sent a postal card requesting him to cover the deficiency. Baker got the card and tore it up.

Two days later Seelye came panting into Baker's office and asked him to square up, and it took the shrewd real estate operator only about one minute to take his measure as a man whom it would be easy to work.

"That's right," he admitted, after the pass book had been balanced, and then he told a beautiful story of a real estate "deal," which would materialize in a few days, after which the account would be promptly squared.

Baker realized that Seelye couldn't betray him, even if he wanted to. Then the game began in earnest. Baker had been making small deposits all the time, and checking the money out; but now the checks began to grow larger and the deposits smaller. There were little overdrafts every day or two, and every time he met them Seelye realized that he was indeed in a "big hole," and that it was getting steadily bigger.

So it went on from week to week and month to month and year to year. The checks grew larger and more frequent, the overdraft bigger and bigger, and Baker's promises smoother and more magnificent. And Seelye still believed him. He never threatened Seelye with State Prison. He was never brutally dictatorial, as he might have been. He was always regretful and hopeful, but every day his checks came in at the bank, and poor Seelye had to see them paid or confess a shortage, which was up in the tens of thousands of dollars, and he couldn't do that.

Meanwhile Baker was living like a fighting cock, spending thousands of dollars annually. He had an expensive family, maintained a handsome town house and a beautiful country home and was able when he chose to take his family to Europe for a vacation.

During all this time the man who was providing thousands for Baker's speculations was piling up along on $35 a week, trying to meet his insurance premiums and to make payments on his little house in Halsey street, Brooklyn. Every day after banking hours he went home clinging to a strap in a crowded trolley car, while the man whose tool he was could ride in a carriage.

But Seelye did not go entirely without reward. After he had supplied Baker with a good many thousands it occurred to him such accommodation was worth something. So occasionally he went to Baker's office and timidly "touched him" for a few dollars. Sometimes it was $2 to go to a baseball match, or $5 for the theatre, and sometimes these "loans" of $2 or $5 or $100 never inconvenienced Baker, because he had only to put out checks for $5, $10 or $1,000, and Seelye had to see him through.

All told Baker got about $35,000 a year from Seelye. Seelye got about $1,000 a year out of Baker, and he paid for it with an amount of misery and suffering which few men endured. And all the time Baker was making gilded promises of restitution, which he never kept. Then at last the system of bookkeeping was changed, and the long dreaded exposure became sure.

A UNIQUE FISHING CRAFT.

SAID TO SAIL IN A CALM

The Most Successful of American Fishermen—A Successful Trip—His Trouble With the Irish—An Interview With an Old Sea Dog.

There came into New York harbor the other day a woman's fishing craft. She was the Helen Miller Gould, of Gloucester, Mass.

"The name is an honor to the boat," said Captain Jacobs, as he made fast to the wharf, "and the boat is a credit to the name. How could it be otherwise?"

The curiosity was as to the style of craft which Capt. Jacobs, who is known as "the pioneer" fisherman, had designed. The thing that mackerel fishermen dread even more than a storm is a calm. Without wind to enable them to draw near when the fish are schooling they might as well be in port. Many a good catch had been prevented by the wind suddenly dying out while the fish were in sight. To secure immunity from loss due in this way to calms, Captain Jacobs placed an order for a small compact electro-gasoline engine of 35 horse-power. He arranged to set this in the stern under the cabin, and he built berths for his battery cells and tanks for his fuel in the same part of the vessel. The midship section he set apart for his store and salting quarters; and then found that he had ample space forward for his supplies, for his mess-room and for sleeping quarters for his men. The cost of building and equipping the vessel according to Captain Jacobs' plans was $23,000, which is a pretty stiff price for a mackerel schooner, and more than twice as much as many of them cost.

"We owe the success of this trip to the little engine," Captain Jacobs said, as he whisked off the hatch and pointed to the bins full of mackerel lying between the layers of ice in the hold. "There are 36,000 as fine fish as you ever saw, and we got them in two casts of that net. That's pretty near high line. But we'd never have come near them if we had been dependent solely upon our canvas, for there wasn't a whisper of a breeze blowing when we sighted 'em. That engine is the new fangle in mackerel fishing. It's a thing the other fellows will be running after soon."

The Helen Miller Gould got rid of her fish even faster than she caught them, for by 2 o'clock in the afternoon the 36,000 had been sold. Most of the fish went for ten cents each, but the choice brought twelve cents, and the catch put $4,800 in the pockets of the owners—not bad for two hauls of the net in a few days' fishing. On Wednesday morning at daybreak the Helen Miller Gould was scudding out through the Narrows again, bound down the coast in quest of other schools of fish. Miss Gould had expected to pay a visit to her namesake, but other engagements prevented. She probably will inspect the schooner on its return.

Last year was a bad year also for mackerel on this side, and in his efforts to supply the market Captain Jacobs came close to involving this country in another fisheries dispute with Great Britain. In defiance of sailor superstitions he crossed to the Irish coast where mackerel were plenty. In his thirteenth vessel, the Ethel B. Jacobs—named after one of his daughters. And he crossed the ocean in her in thirteen days; would have made it nine, he says, had he not been becalmed four days.

The Irish fishermen heard of his coming and were up in arms against him; but he fished outside the three-mile limit in all sorts of weather, and had good luck. He ran into Liverpool to ship his catch to this side, and the British Government seized his vessel and kept her tied up for a month before he could secure her release. Then he instructed his lawyer to file a claim for damages against England—and went right back to the Irish coast after more mackerel. He had shipped cargoes of fish to the value of $7,000 to this market, when he was told by cable that his wife was seriously ill.

Command of the Ethel B. was turned over to his friend and mate Captain William Cluett, and an English pilot was put aboard of her. Then Captain Jacobs came home. Captain Cluett made a successful haul and started to Liverpool with his fish, but the English pilot ran him on a reef on the Irish coast and sent the Ethel B. Jacobs to the bottom. So the thirteenth hoodoo finally got in its work. Captain Cluett is sailing with Captain Jacobs on the Helen Miller Gould, which is pretty good evidence that the loss of the Ethel B. Jacobs is laid to that English pilot.

ON A SHOESTRING.

How a Democratic Leader Was Elected to Congress.

Congressman William Sulzer, of New York City, since he ran for assembly a number of years ago on a shoestring, and defeated the regular Tammany nominee, has been a great favorite with Richard Croker, and, in fact, is looked upon as his darling light-haired boy. Mr. Sulzer is now serving his third term in Congress, and is counted one of the leaders on the Democratic side of the House. He is also a member of the New York Press Club. And thereby hangs a tale.

A number of years ago two of his friends employed on a paper were discharged, and they appealed to Mr. Sulzer, then Speaker of the Assembly, to have him use his influence to get them work on another paper.

"All right," said Sulzer. "Start a daily paper of your own, and I'll help you."

And they did. The paper from the jump carried a large line of advertising, including city work, and its circulation ran up to nearly 60,000 at a bound.

After the withdrawal of Mr. Sulzer, the paper was consolidated with the New York Mercury—now the Daily Telegraph.

Congressman Sulzer remains a great and good friend of the newspaper boys, and holds his membership in the Press Club. He is a forceful and eloquent speaker and an excellent presiding officer.

Reportee in Congress.

"My observation and experience in the House has been that it is extremely dangerous to interrupt a man who is making a speech," observed Representative Champ Clark of Missouri, who gave the cold shivers to Representative Adams of Pennsylvania the other day, when the latter interposed some remark into his utterances on the Philippine question. "If he has good control of his mental apparatus, the chances are all in his favor."

"I once received a stunning blow myself," which exemplified my original statement. It was in the last Congress, when the House was trying to fix a time for debating the civil service law. Some gentleman had proposed that the time should be divided equally between the friends and opponents of the law. Colonel Peck Hepburn, of Iowa, told the House that he thought the time should be divided into three parts. One portion should be given to the friends of the present law. There were others who were in favor of a partial repeal only; they should be given a portion of the time. Then Colonel Hepburn said the other portion of the time should be given to the Democrats, who were for total repeal of the law.

"How do you know that?" I was rash enough to ask him. "Because it is wrong, and the Democrats are always wrong," he retorted. Afterwards," added the Missourian, "I crossed over to the Republican side and congratulated Colonel Hepburn. I often refer to that incident when I lecture."—Washington Post.

That New England Conscience.

I have heard it denied that small New England children have the New England conscience, but some things I have seen and heard incline me to think that they often have it, says a writer in the Boston Transcript. A story that was told me the other day points that way. One day the mother of a ten-year old boy gave him two slices of buttered bread, telling him to give one of them to his little sister. He carried out the order. That night, when he went to bed, he was evidently disturbed in his mind and remorseful about something, and his mother questioned him in a way to bring out the truth. "I—I wasn't sure to Peggy about that bread and butter," he owned. "Why," asked his mother, "did you take the bigger piece?" "No," he answered, "there was a little bigger than my piece was, but mine was a good deal buttered."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Latest Airship.

Scientists, geniuses, mechanics, philosophers and cranks are still trying to solve the problem of aerial navigation. Whether any one of them will soon succeed or whether the question is to remain unanswered for years, no one can safely predict. The far some problems have been overcome, but not all. The latest device is the Pickering air ship, an illustration of the working model of which is shown herewith. It is claimed it can be steered, raised or lowered, and speeded against a strong wind. The inventor is confident of its success. But he is not yet quite ready to take his initial voyage.

Evidently Holding Hands.

"Is that young man in the park with Maud still?" asked her father, suddenly looking up from his paper. "Very still," replied her mother. Chicago Post.

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield, England, has commissioned Onslow Ford to execute a marble bust of Queen Victoria for the new town hall.

OUR BOARD OF EDUCATION

There seems to be a great deal of dissatisfaction expressed on the part of colored people against the board of education. It is claimed that the colored members do just what they are told to do by the white members. This cannot be true, if the report is true about what one of the colored members said about his actions in the Clark case. It does not speak well for him as a beginner. If there was a difference made in that appointment Congress should be called upon to investigate it. Just why Clark should be selected for supervising principal over so many more experienced teachers, is not understood by those interested in the public schools of this city. Commissioner McFarland can readily see that there is no more difference in appointing people on the Board of Education who have relatives in the schools than there is to appoint a person who has relatives seeking appointment in the schools. The Bee has never known it to fail where heads of departments and all other institutions could appoint or promote a relative it was done. Men who start out to reform institutions and other acts, always get the worst of it.

LEAVE THE SOUTH.

It is to the interest of the southern negro to leave that section and go to some place where the political atmosphere is more congenial to him. There is no salvation for the negro south. Let him settle in some state or territory where he will be able to build himself up.

SCHOOL APPOINTMENTS.

The School Board of Education has appointed the superintendents for white and colored schools. There may be some disappointments but no doubt the Board has acted wisely in the selection it has made with but a few exceptions. There was too much favoritism shown in the supervising principalship. There were other teachers of ability more entitled to the place if a teachers record counts for anything. There seemed to have been some school politics displayed. However on the whole the board is to be commended.

This year's convention of Ohio Democrats was the smallest for the past quarter of a century. Yet, Chairman Jones predicts Democratic success in Ohio this year.

Since the Republicans have so declared in favor of shipping subsidies—leaving to Congress the adoption of the method of upbuilding Merchant Marine in the foreign trade—perhaps the Democrats at their Kansas City convention may conclude to do likewise.

The Vermont Democrats are for free silver. The electoral votes of the Green Mountain State will be recorded on the side of a stable currency and business prosperity.

There may be nothing in a name, but Admiral Schley is a shrewd enough to decline to place himself in the hands of the Democratic political lion.

Democrats who assert that the Republican national convention did not endorse shipping subsidies find in the Republican shipping plank nothing to find fault with—hence their annoyance. Republicans are satisfied.

The settlement of the difficulties at the Samoan Islands was one of diplomatic incidents which terminated happily under this Administration.

The last Democratic President hauled down the American flag at Hawaii; it was restored to its place over the Pacific by President McKinley.

The Republican national platform declares in favor of legislation for the upbuilding of American Merchant Marine in the foreign trade, and Congress may be depended upon to pass such a measure early in the next session.

The platform of the Republican party this year is as strong as was the demand of the people for the unanimous nomination of McKinley and Roosevelt. Of the President it said: "Walking untried paths and facing unforeseen responsibilities, President McKinley has been in every situation the true American patriot and the upright statesman, clear in vision, strong in judgment, firm in action, always inspiring and deserving the confidence of his countrymen." In asking the people to endorse the Republican party for its record of business prosperity, stable currency and patriotic Americanism, it should be remembered that the threat to prosperity has always existed in the ranks of the Democratic party as well as in its incapacity to properly manage our public affairs. The strength of the two candidates that represent it, and the unanimity with which both were endorsed by the Republican party at Philadelphia will ensure a more sweeping victory than was given for McKinley and prosperity in 1896.

LOVE MADE HIM A SUICIDE.

Ham, a Monkey, Starves Himself to Death.

HAD A FINE EDUCATION.

His Mistress Went Away For a Month and When She Returned It Was Only in Time to Witness the Funeral Services.

Nature made Ham, Jr., a monkey. Education made him all but a man. Love made him a suicide. He died for love of Mme. d'Osta, who had taught him to use a knife and fork and napkin, to dress and undress, to sleep in a bed, to take medicine, to say "yes," "no," and "mamma."

That was the word he spoke oftentimes—"mamma." He waited continually during his last days, when the choicest delicacies failed to shake his resolve to die by starvation. It was his last cry, as he took a photograph from under his pillow and held it before his glazing eyes.

The picture was that of Mme. d'Osta, for she was "mamma." Ham, Jr., learned to play many parts. He would impersonate a laborer smoking his pipe, an old woman slipping her tea, a gourmet tasting his wine, a student reading his book, a politician haranguing his constituents.

But that was all mimicry. He was an orang-outang, one of a batch of fifteen bought in Borneo three years ago by Captain d'Osta.

Two years ago his education was begun. This important work was intrusted to Mme. d'Osta.

Table manners, for example. How might signs of heredity be overcome to make a monkey eat with a spoon? Mme. d'Osta devised a deep, narrow cup, into which Ham, Jr., could not insert his hand.

Very good, Ham, Jr.'s intelligence prompted him to use a spoon to extract his food from the cup. But heredity inspired him to drop each spoonful on the table and convey it thence to his mouth with his hands.

Mme. d'Osta procured the services of a child and kept it hungry against the monkey's meal times. It was instructed to snatch away and eat every spoonful of food that Ham, Jr., dumped upon the table, and it obeyed. Ham, Jr., was first mystified, then pained, then indignant. Then he chattered with wrath. It was no use. At the other side of the table his beloved mistress was eating daintily with a spoon, and the greedy child had no opportunity to snatch away a small morsel.

(An after dinner smoke.)

Ham, Jr., elevated his eyebrows half a dozen times with great rapidity, and tried the experiment of carrying a spoonful from the cup direct to his mouth.

Eureka! The greedy child was foiled. From that moment Ham, Jr. ate with a spoon.

Love claimed him throughout every branch of his education. It was a triumph for him when he learned to articulate "yes" and "no" with a full knowledge of their meaning, but the greatest triumph of all when he found the trick of saying "mamma."

A month ago Mme. d'Osta was obliged to leave Ham, Jr. in Baltimore while she accompanied the circus to Brooklyn. It was deemed unwise to allow him to travel, because he could not be kept in an even temperature, so he was taken to the Bostock menagerie in Atlantic City.

Ham, Jr., cowered in his cage all day, crying "Mamma! Mamma!" His food remained untouched. The head keeper went for Dr. Somers, of No. 2012 Pacific street.

Dr. Somers could not detect any cause for the monkey's illness. Ham, Jr., could not describe his symptoms. He could only say "Mamma! Mamma!"

GREATEST OF PRISONS.

Years Ago It Held Thousands of Convicts.

Near the southwest corner of the continent of Australia nestles the little coast town of Fremantle, and half a mile back of it, surrounded by sand dunes and mallee scrub, is a famous old convict prison—the largest penal institution in the world. And yet comparatively few people, even in Australia, know of its existence. Western Australia, the division in which Fremantle lies, was the last crown colony of the Australasian group, and it was not until twenty-five years ago that the steady stream of convict ships ceased to touch its shores.

Old Botany Bay, near Sydney, on the east coast, had been Britain's principal convict settlement for nearly half a century, but the rapid growth of New South Wales and the force of public opinion turned the place with its grim history from a living hell to one of the most beautiful little suburban cities on the continent. It was then that the town of Fremantle began to fill up rapidly, necessitating the erection of a stone jail capable of holding within its walls 28,000 convicts—the majority of them being probably the most hardened criminals of the century. The building of this prison was what is known as a crown job, and like most British public works of that kind, was completed on time. Probably centuries will pass before its solid seven-foot granite walls will crumble or its battlements show signs of decay.

Western Australia continued to grow, and after bearing for many years the stigma of "convict settlement," was at last freed from the stain, as her sister colony had been years before, the home government announcing that it would send no more of its convict classes to the continent of Australia. The day that this proclamation reached Western Australia the people began a week of joyful demonstrations and fetes in celebration of the decision. And from that day, too, they began to let the very existence of the place back into the Fremantle Hills die out of their memory.

The jailers in the prison, one to every twenty-five convicts, were drawn exclusively from the ranks of war veterans. Old heroes of the Crimea and the Indian mutiny, many of them with their beards covered with chips and medals, went down the road to the grave side by side with the men they guarded. With the passing of the years the hand of time began to lay heavy on all alike. In 1885 there were only about seventy convicts and four hundred convicts left, and of these nearly all were white-headed and tottering. Most of them hobbled slowly round the enormous quadrangles, pondered about the gardens that lately they had been permitted to keep, and fraternized and meditated together, prisoners and keepers alike. Every Saturday afternoon the veterans donned their threadbare and faded military uniforms, pinned on their medals, and with their old flags carried ahead, would march proudly but slowly down through the principal street of the little town to the beach and then back again "home." Cut off by many years of absence from the old ties and held close to their prison life in the new colony; they had become oblivious to everything but their old war memories, the village paper, and the prison.

The convicts were past all thought of escape. Time and age had dried up their criminal propensities, and they were as harmless as little children. Indeed not unlike little children in many ways. There were very few of them that had not some black history of shame and degradation as a prelude to their convict life, but on the powerful, strange immensity of that almost empty prison they were doing out their few remaining years in pure and simple living. Dull houses made from shell, crumpled woven baskets, and carved mallee roots for sale to visitors—these things with their flower beds took up all their time. Once, when the Duke of Edinburgh visited Western Australia, the guards went out in a body, leaving the prison gates open. Half a dozen of the convicts followed the gay old fellows down to the water and back again. All could have gone if they had liked, but they preferred to stay "home."

Fremantle jail is probably the only penal institution in the world where prisoners may wander in and out, hark in the sun in front of the big frowning entrance and sit and sleep with their backs propped up against the outside of the walls. It is an old man's home—without the wrangling and discord that usually exist in those institutions.

PAINTING LEO'S PORTRAIT.

H. J. Thaddeus Gives Some Interesting Reminiscences.

H. J. Thaddeus, the artist, in the following interesting reminiscences to a recent issue of Mainly People:

If, as the dictionary declares, after he "one who sits," the term "sitter" applied to Pope Leo XIII. Nervously restless, he rarely sat any length of time, and never sat out incessant changes of attitude. The difficulty of producing a likeness of his holiness, may be imagined; rapidity of draughtsmanship is indispensable, and I found studies of his individual features, deepest eye, the mobile mouth, and characteristic ear, of great assistance. The Pope has a peculiar idea of how he desires to be self in his seat, his hand upon his two fingers extended as in an act of benediction, a conversational drawing back his colorless smile, stiffening every muscle as all do in photographic exposure, then abandoning it, "Voila, mon fant!" he would exclaim, with an air of triumph.

This, however, was exactly what had determined not to represent Leo XIII. in painting him, one must be, in painting the mind and will of this remarkable man, for they were to shine through the frail, almost phantasmic flesh they have rubbed, intelligent, ascetic, with broad forehead, the thin skin of which showed the tracery of the veins, with many features and deepest eyes of steel, and composed as that of a conqueror, it was thus that Leo XIII. appeared to me, a dominant and imposing personality, whether arrayed in the plain calzon (skull-cap) as I painted him, or in splendid pontifical robes and priceless gems.

The Pope has changed but since I had the honor, in 1894, of painting him. How well I remember my introduction to him! It was a first important commission. I was surprised with the kindness, but could not conceal surprise that so young a man should have been chosen for the work, and gave me every assistance, and that of remaining still, which I have, was out of his power. I submitted the portrait he was so much distressed at the look of given therein, and he remonstrated, saying, "Mon enfant, l'homme n'est pas d'âge!" And Leo XIII's frail form has set the pace at defiance. For, while prepared death, as he felt one of his subjects, he believes that his here below is not yet run, "le vie," he said, "is a characteristic of the Pope family; they live long, and death comes to them suddenly. He repeats this was certainly the case with his holiness's grandfather, who died so suddenly indeed, but at the age of 80. During the sittings Leo XIII. was unusually in French words, sometimes in Italian, and always in extreme rapidity. His range of subjects was extensive. He spoke strange experiences in brigades of Benvenuto, where as depicted restored peace; of England, and of the miniature at Brussels. He told me to my great surprise, that he only commenced to study French when appointed to Belgium, and could speak it as fluently as I do by the time I reached Brussels!"

"King Leopold used to exclaim, 'I forget French is an Italian!' and Dante, Keats, and the cure, the condition of Ireland—some of the subjects on which Leo XIII. discoursed with knowledge and disconcertment, taking staff and pen, and scribbled on the fly-leaf. Lately, by medical advice, he has renounced this, his old hobby. I have been indeed fortunate in my sittings—Gladstone, the List, the general of the Jesuits, Richard Owen—and many other whose conversation was as fascinating as that; but, inspired by his own personality and gracious nature, I never worked with deeper interest than at the portraits of Auguste Comte, Pope Leo XIII.

And here they parted, each taking the other to the detriment of the cause.

FOUND HIS HOODOO.

It Was the Moon Seen Over His Right Shoulder.

Being naturally a good-natured husband and father, he retained his pent-up feelings until they became irrepressible. The consequence was an explosive relief.

"See here, madam," was his beginning, and it was an ominous one, for he generally addressed her by a pet name, "we've been married twenty years, and I've done billions of foolish things to please you. It may be a reflection upon my common sense, but it is eloquent of good-heartedness. Now I draw the line. Understand? I draw the line."

"Why, you frighten me. What is it, dear?"

"We went out together Friday evening, February 2. You twisted me around, shouted that there was a new moon, and told me to look at it over my right shoulder. I complied."

"Certainly you did. That means good luck."

"Please don't interrupt me. I am under terrible restraint as it is. Turn your money over," was the next order. I did. "Now, you old darling, you'll be in clover all month." That was your exact language.

"Saturday night we went a good mile beyond the boulevard. We played whist, and I lost every game. When we started home there was no car, because of the fire downtown. We walked north four or five double-strength blocks to meet a car that wasn't coming. Then we walked south to the barns. That is, we walked three or four miles in a howling, driving snowstorm. I had to dig snow out of my ears to hear what you said and out of my eyes to see where we were."

Sunday I had universal neuralgia. Monday night you dragged me out again. I lost a rubber in a snowdrift, we came home in a storm, my unprotected foot was soaked, and I was nothing but one big toothache. Tuesday my heaviest debtor went into bankruptcy, the hired girl left because I missed her with the camphor bottle when she was grinning at me. Good luck! Heavens! Keep your superstitions to yourself after this."—Detroit Free Press.

CATS ON OCEAN LINERS.

Pussies Are as Much a Necessity as Sailors.

Every ocean liner carrying passengers always has on board from six to ten cats, these being apportioned to various parts of the ship, as well as appearing on the vessel's books as regards the rations they draw.

And, even beyond this, on most of the great lines, particular employees are instructed to feed daily as a part of their duties certain cats in their part of the ship. And there is promotion for pussy as well, for any cat that is particularly amiable, clever and interesting is permitted to enjoy the run of the first or second or third class saloons, according to the popular vote.

In this way certain of the first-class saloon pussies have become quite celebrated, especially on the long voyage boats that go to India and Australia, and the stewards of the various classes are quite commonly eager to push their own favorite cat into first place.

Of course, says Tit-Bits, there are amazing favorites with the staff of the ship that are fine hunters, and do not seek "society."

When the ship is in port a certain man has the duty of feeding the cats at regular hours and of entering the rations in a book, but every cat on the ship that has been long there seems to wait with eagerness for, and to recognize at once, the professional rat catcher who always goes to work in the hold of every passenger liner when it comes to dock, and who lives by riding ships of rats. The "staff cats," as the stewards call them, never leave the rat man till he has finished his duties. Large sums have been offered for one saloon cat on a great line, and the staff have to guard it strictly from acquisitive admirers, in whose luggage it has several times been found.

THE TILLAMOOK LIGHT.

Perched on the Highest Point Used by Our Lighthouse Department.

The highest point used by the Lighthouse Department of the United States Government as a signal station is a precipitous rock in the northwestern part of Oregon, called Tillamook Rock. Its great height and perilous situation tend to make this rock the most avoided one on the government list, and it is only after long and careful search that men are found who are willing to go as keepers to the station.

Tillamook Rock Light Station is in the Thirteenth Lighthouse District, which includes the coast and rivers of Oregon, Washington and Alaska. It is situated in the midst of the surging Pacific, with ninety feet depth of water on all sides, at the great storm center of Tillamook Head.

It is eighteen miles south of the entrance to the Columbia River, and one mile southwest by a half a mile west from Tillamook Head, on the Oregon coast. The water near Tillamook has such a strong and uncertain current that vessels unacquainted with the passage are warned not to attempt the coast. The rock, which has a summit of eighty feet above the sea level, is an irregular column of basalt, apparently separated from Tillamook Head on the mainland by untold centuries of erosion prior to the days when the sea was receding on the Pacific and encroaching upon the land on the Atlantic.

The reason for the difficulty in securing keepers for Tillamook is said to be that a man not only risks his life in accepting the position, but his reason as well. At present a keeper and four assistants are provided, for the double purpose of dividing the watches and mitigating the awful isolation that tends toward unseating the reason.

The mere monotony of seeing the same face (of a man, of course) day in and day out for months and years, amid the same wild scene and in the same narrow treadmill of labor, is irritating, it begets dislike by its very annoyance of monotony. It is so different when the face is that of a woman—a wife.

The redeeming feature of Tillamook Station is its Elysian zephyr, known as the chinook wind, flowing with perennial delight from the northwest in summer and imparting unequalled longevity, and coming in winter from the southwest with healing on its wings.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

NEW SUPERINTENDENTS APPOINTED—MUCH SURPRISED AND DISAPPOINTMENT EXPRESSED—MRS. FRANCIS APPOINTS HER HUSBAND'S COUSIN SUPERVISING PRINCIPAL—FAVORITISM AT THE STAKE.

After a lengthy session of the board of education at the Franklin building Saturday afternoon the following list of appointments was agreed upon: Superintendent—Alexander T. Stuart.

Assistant superintendent—Mrs. Ida G. Myers and W. S. Montgomery. Secretary—John B. Stenman. Chief clerk—J. G. Falk.

Clerks—John W. F. Smith and W. W. Conner. Director of high schools—Dr. Francis R. Lane.

Supervising principals: First division—E. G. Kimball. Second division—N. P. Gage. Third division—Dr. H. M. Johnson. Fourth division—B. T. Janney. Fifth division—W. B. Patterson. Sixth division—J. R. Keene. Seventh division—John F. Freeman. Eighth division—J. H. Clark. Ninth division—J. H. Waring. Tenth division—E. W. Brown.

Principals of high schools: Central—Percy M. Hughes. Eastern—M. M. F. Swartzell. Western—Miss Edith C. Westcott. Business—William J. Davis. Washington (colored)—Robert H. Terrell.

Principal of Normal School—Miss Annie M. Goding. Principal of Normal School (col.)—Miss Lucy E. Moten. Principal of Franklin School—B. W. Murch.

Director of manual training schools—J. A. Chamberlain.

A meeting of the board was held at 10 o'clock last Saturday morning at the Franklin building, when the appointment of teachers was made. The list of last year was approved without change.

After a conference with the board at that time the new superintendent, Mr. Stuart, entered upon his new duties. The other officials assumed their positions at the same time.

As far as has been learned the appointments made by the board give general satisfaction.

Alexander T. Stuart, the new superintendent, is one of the best known men connected with the public schools of the District. He was born in this city fifty-two years ago, and was educated in the public schools and graduated from Columbia University. He entered the public school service as a teacher in the seventh grade in the Franklin, and was promoted to the eighth grade and served as principal of the building. He then became a supervising principal, with headquarters in the Waukap building. With the exception of an interval of a year, when he resigned in order to become secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Stuart has been supervising principal for the past twenty-two years. On account of his experience, as well as his ability, he is looked upon as specially fitted for the position. Personally, he is popular, and in his intercourse with others he has always displayed great tact.

ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENCY. The position of assistant superintendent was given to a woman, as it is believed that as the 1,150 teachers in the public schools, with exception of fifty, are women, the sex should have recognition.

Mrs. Ida G. Myers, who was selected to be the assistant superintendent, has been for the past ten years principal of the Normal School. Previous to taking that position she had had experience as a teacher in the public schools.

The other assistant superintendent, W. S. Montgomery, will have charge of the colored school divisions. He was born in Mississippi, and during the war he went to Vermont, and, after attending the academies in that state, he entered Dartmouth College, in 1873. At the end of the second year he left college, and took a position as teacher in the schools in this city, in order to get money to complete his education. He returned to Dartmouth and graduated in 1878.

CLERICAL POSITIONS. The chief clerk of the board, J. G. Falk, has been secretary of the school board for the past ten years and is one of the best posted men in the District in regard to school affairs.

The other two clerical positions were given to W. W. Conner and John W. F. Smith. The former has been the secretary of Gen. Geo. H. Harries at the board of trade rooms, and is taking a law course at Georgetown Law School. He is a capable stenographer.

Mr. Smith has been for some time secretary of the superintendent of the colored divisions, and will probably assist Mr. Montgomery.

The position of E. G. Kimball as principal of the Franklin building will be taken by B. W. Murch, who has been the assistant superintendent of the schools. Mr. Kimball succeeds Superintendent Stuart.

Miss Annie M. Goding, the new principal of the Normal School, has for some years past been an assistant to Mrs. Myers, the principal of the school.

SUPERVISING PRINCIPAL. J. B. Clark, who has been appointed supervising principal of ninth division in place of Mr. Montgomery, has been for many years principal of the Stevens school.

Mrs. Sarah Murray of Wilmington, Delaware, the devoted mother of Mr. E. Murray of South West Washington departed this life Wednesday July 11. Her funeral took place Friday afternoon from Bethel Church, Wilmington Delaware. Mr. Murray attended the funeral.

The funeral of Miss "Florence McIntosh" took place from the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church at 2 o'clock July 14. Rev. George W. Lee, D. D., officiated, assisted by Rev. Wm. O. Howard. Miss McIntosh taught in the public school in Anacostia and also in the Sunday school of the Vermont Avenue Baptist Church.

TUSKEGEE NOTES.

Mr. Thomas J. Kirk, superintendent of public instruction for the State of California, accompanied by Mrs. Kirk, were interesting visitors at Tuskegee last week. They inspected the various departments of the institution, and expressed themselves as highly pleased with the work being conducted there.

The task of painting all the buildings owned by the institution is nearing completion. A northern friend donated the money for this purpose. The buildings are brighter and add much to the cheerful aspect of the school.

The young men in the divisions of Wheelwright and Blacksmithing are constructing a beautiful new trap which is to be sent to the North as an exhibit of what the students are really accomplishing in those divisions. A number of other articles representing the various industries will also be exhibited.

A NEW SALOON.

Messrs. Geo. P. and Eugene L. Silence have opened a fine saloon as any one who wishes to visit at the convenient and popular corner of 8th and E. streets, northwest, 430 8th street. This is one of the best locations in the city for restaurant purposes. They give midday lunch as good as any that you can secure at Harvey's. The ladies' dining room is a thing of beauty. Everything new from a salt cellar to a tablecloth. The Banquet hall west of the ladies' dining room is fitted up in the newest style of furniture and the entire house is lighted up by electricity, and when lighted at night reminds one of the famous Delmonico's Restaurant, New York. Mr. Louis G. Varick is head bartender.

MINISTER FELL BY POKER.

Streak o' Luck Struck by a Young Crusader.

He was new in the city. When he first arrived strangers who saw him gambled that he was either a professional poker player or a minister. They could not tell which. He was not known personally to the men who frequented the gambling houses, and not much notice was taken of him when, in search of material for his sermon, he walked in alone one Monday night and glanced nervously around a room where a dozen men were playing different games. It seemed familiar to him for in his younger and wilder days he had gambled himself. The manager spied him and put him down at once as a slick professional who was there on a tiger-bucking expedition. He spoke to him, and learned his name.

"Dawson," he repeated. "Say, are you old Bill Dawson who used to run the faro bank in Memphis when I was there ten years ago? No? Well you are welcome, for you look like the dead game article and if you can beat me why then all well and good."

Mr. Dawson did not know how to explain. He had an inkling that he would be sent away if he said he was Dawson the minister, so he said nothing. He walked about aimlessly. The proprietor wanted to see him play. Dawson had not looked for anything like this and he tated. The proprietor pushed him. There was a two dollar game, he said, just starting in the next room and they needed another player. The rattling of the chips and the calls of the gamblers, with the big money in sight, dazed Dawson and he allowed himself to be pushed into the poker room. Before he really knew what was up the proprietor had shoved him to a chair.

"Here's a good player, boys," he said, "and I want to see what he can do. He is Mr. Dawson and he is all right."

Of course the players were glad to see Mr. Dawson, but glad to see the color of his money.

"You look like you could deal the cards in the pulpit," said a big man at the table, and Dawson colored. He laughed it away. The proprietor came up and Dawson, like a man in a dream, took out some money and bought a stack of chips.

"Seems as if the new player is dopy," commented a hitherto silent player, and Dawson braced himself. He saw that he was in for it and he had to play his way out. If he could lose, he thought, and then get away nobody would suspect that he was the parson, and all would be serene.

The game opened slow. There were no good hands running and the betting was quiet. So Dawson had more time to think. He was the last man to deal and he took the cards nervously, but the feel of the pasteboards seemed to give him more confidence in himself and he shuffled them like a veteran.

Everything was a jack pot and the first man to say opened for a couple of dollars. Two others stayed, a third raised and Dawson came in. There was more betting. When cards were called the opener stood pat, another man wanted two cards, another three and Dawson took one. He had drawn to aces and eights, the gambler's hand, and when he picked up the fifth card he saw the ace of spades. The betting got lively. The opener, with a flush, considered it good and bet accordingly. Dawson, who by that time, felt the return of his old-time sporting blood, came on with a raise which paralyzed some of the more timid players and they dropped out. The dealer stuck and sent back another raise which was met and returned. Dawson was not going to cover and it was left to the opener to call.

"That's good," the opener said quietly, when Dawson announced that he had a full hand, and so the big pot, which was rich, was moved over to the parson's corner.

By this time the minister forgot his cloth and his errand to the place and he played with all his old-time enthusiasm. The cards ran well; it was just such a streak of luck as occasionally is found with a newcomer. The minister took in pot after pot. Once there was a good pot which had been sweetened time and again, and when one of the players said he would open it, Dawson found that he did not have a pair even to go in with. He had an ace, a jack, a seven, a ten and a deuce. He wanted to go in and try for the pot. He could well afford to lose a few. He started to draw to the ace, but reconsidered and held up the seven because he considered it lucky. Well, when he picked up his four cards, glanced at them without moving a feature and began raising the big bets, the other players put him down as a wonderful bluffer and came back at him hot and fast. When the big man finally called, the gambling parson quietly laid down four sevens and raked in the pot. He had beaten four out. That was a sample of his luck.

At daylight Dawson cashed in $1,670 from the night's game. Just as he had shoved the money into his clothes a man came out from the room where the faro banking had been open, and recognized the minister.

"Why, Mr. Dawson," he said, "what are you doing here?"

Dawson tried to explain. There was a wrangle. Finally Dawson explained the whole thing. To make a long story short Dawson packed his things and left the town at noon. Soon afterward he heard of him plunging high in Denver, and from that time on he turned in to be a professional gambler.

GOOD TRUST ORGANIZER

William H. Moore Pays $5,000,000 in Debts and Wins a Fortune of $10,000,000 in Five Years—Wall Street Wonders What He Will Do Next.

W. H. Moore is the necromancer of corporations. The Match Trust, the "Cracker" Trust, the Strawboard Trust, the Steel Trust, the Tin Plate Trust, and other trusts were the creations of his brain, and he has before him a country full of trust possibilities. Men in Wall street are now waiting to hear that another trust and a great one is under way.

As an organizer and financial director of great industrial combinations Judge Moore, who is one of the latest additions to New York's colony of Chicago millionaires, will probably always be better known than as a lawyer, but it was due to his knowledge of the corporation laws of many States that he was able to coalesce millions of dollars of the capital of great industries into great trade and manufacturing combinations. Added to his knowledge of corporation law he possesses the merchant sense to a marvellous degree. He juggles with millions of dollars as other men do with thousands. All his undertakings have reached into the millions, and his profits are numbered in like sums.

He has had the rare distinction of falling for $5,000,000. But that was nothing to this wizard of money, for before four years had passed he was out of debt and $10,000,000 ahead of the game. It takes a financier to do that. And through it all not a smirch has been put upon his good name.

One of the first industries to attract his attention was match manufacturing, in which, while the Diamond Match Company was the leader, there was great competition. In 1889 he succeeded in consolidating nearly all of the match interests under a single control, which was run on Standard Oil principles as nearly as possible and which opposed competition wherever it found it. It was through speculating in the stock of the Diamond Match Company that the Moore brothers lost $5,000,000 and went into debt for $5,000,000 more.

Besides the Diamond Match Company Judge Moore succeeded in organizing what was known as the Cracker Trust, or the New York Biscuit Company, the American Strawboard Company and the National Steel Company. The latter, his greatest achievement, was completed February 7, 1899. It embraces the National Steel Company, the American Tin Plate Company, the American Steel Hoop Company and the American Sheet Steel Company. This organization took in the leading steel mills of the country except the Carnegie interests, and represents capitalization of many millions of dollars. In 1898 the Moores had promoted the National Biscuit Company, which brought them a net profit of $2,000,000, and after the organization of the steel companies their fees for their services had amounted to $10,000,000. These corporations, with the Strawboard Trust, which was not as successful as the others, are known as the "Moore group," and represent an aggregate capitalization of $225,000,000.

In November, 1899, William H. Moore went to New York, and a month later bought the house then being built by W. E. D. Stokes at No. 4 East Fifty-fourth street, adjoining Fifth avenue, and the residence of Henry M. Flagler. This was evidence of his permanent residence in New York, and something startling was looked for in the interests that he represented. The Stokes house cost him $325,000. Until the house was finished, in March, he lived at the Holland House, and was one of its most conspicuous guests. His fifty-fourth street house is a five story American basement structure, on ground 36 feet front and 100 feet deep. It has a cut stone front, solid marble stairways, and is well lighted and ventilated, having windows on three sides.

Manners.

The Boston mamma was thoroughly out of patience.

"Thereau," she exclaimed, shaking her three-year-old son until his outside pair of glasses fell off, "how often must I tell you not to devour books with your elbows on the table!"

To have a child who is deficient in manners, is, in some towns, as sharp, if not sharper, than a serpent's tooth.

SHE HITS THE BULL'S EYE.

Great Shooting by a Young Indiana Woman.

COMES BY IT NATURALLY

Possibly It May be a Case of Heredity, But at all Events She is a Wonder—Her Passion for Target Shooting—Will Continue to Practise.

Some one has said there is a latent talent in every human being that, given an opportunity, is certain to push its way to the front. This would seem to be true of Miss Sonia Wright, of Lafayette, Ind., who is at the present moment attracting a great deal of notice to herself by reason of the very phenomenal shooting she is doing with a target rifle. It should be said for Miss Wright that, although her father was a British soldier, a member of the Royal Engineers, and she herself was born in the army, in Ireland, she was not at all acquainted with firearms, and when one day she visited the Lafayette Water Works with a party of ladies, the subject of guns coming up, she innocently asked the difference between a rifle and a shotgun.

John E. Long, the expert shot, who, though not laying claim to any championship honors, is yet regarded as one of the best all round fancy, trick and target shooters in the United States, is assistant engineer at the water works. Mr. Long was showing Miss Wright and her companions his supply of rifles, and during the explanation remarked that if he could find some bright-eyed, steady-nerved boy—one like his own son Clarence, recently deceased—he believed he would take him and train him in the use of firearms. Miss Wright jocularly asked him if she would not do as a pupil, and with no thought of her ever coming back Mr. Long responded affirmatively. Three or four days later Miss Wright presented herself, saying she came for her first lesson. Long procured the guns, and after showing Miss Wright how to handle the weapon, placed a cartridge in one of them and told her to shoot.

The very first shot Miss Wright fired struck the bull's-eye. Mr. Long, as well as his pupil, naturally supposed this was an accident, but it only went to show that the young lady pupil possessed an ability that she had never before known about. At the second lesson given her by Mr. Long the young woman put 20 out of a possible 22 shots in a space one inch long and one-half inch wide. This was at off-hand target practice, ten yards.

At the 120th shot fired by Miss Wright the bullet cut in twain a card that was held edgewise toward her. This card was cut in two at the first shot made at it, and the shot was made at the regular stage range of twenty-four feet. I saw a bit of cardboard with a bullet hole therein; it is a piece held between his thumb and finger by Mr. Long, whose confidence in the ability of the pupil was so great that he permitted her to shoot at the card as it was held in his hand.

At a public entertainment given by a church recently Miss Wright with a rifle cut cards edgewise, lighted a match with the bullet as it sped from the rifle, snuffed out a candle and knocked the ashes from the end of a cigar, not making a single miss. She says the candle shooting was the most difficult, because unless the bullet hit the wick the light would not be extinguished. She says she has developed a passion for target shooting, and intends, by practice, to become as expert as it is possible for a woman to be with a rifle.

Found the Ring.
An interesting story comes from Provo regarding the age of miracles. For those who are not superstitious it is doubly entertaining. During a recent visit of President George Q. Cannon to the Southern town he was entertained at the home of L. Holbrook, manager of the Grand Central Mine. Mr. Holbrook's fifteen-year-old daughter Aura told President Cannon that she had dreamed three times that she had found a diamond ring, and in the third dream a man giving his name as Vans, and address Dallas, Texas, had told her he lost a ring while going through Provo 10 years ago, and that she could find it under a certain rock giving minute details as to the location of the same. President Cannon listened to the story with interest, and at its conclusion told the girl she should follow up her dream. Aura got on her wheel and rode away. In less than two minutes she returned, holding a diamond ring in her hand. She claims to have found it in the place described by her dreamland visitant.

It is interesting to know that Miss Aura has a fondness for diamond rings and has answered a great many advertisements of them.—Salt Lake Herald.

Stole Watch to Get Square.

"Great Scott! but that's a fine watch," came from the chorus. "Where did you get it?" "Stole it," answered its possessor calmly. "You don't believe me, do you?" he went on. "Well, I'll tell you how it happened. I was on a Western district which enjoyed the reputation of being the toughest one covered by the house. I had some time to kill and so went into one of the gambling joints. It isn't necessary to go into details as to what happened. As luck would have it, there were a half dozen others in the place beside myself, who might be considered as possible victims. When the lights were put out suddenly and then we had "rough house" for about ten minutes. In the middle of it I felt somebody grab my watch, and reached out after him. I caught some one else. I felt that he was just putting a watch in his trousers pocket. I gave his wrist a hard wrench and got the timepiece. Then I broke away. When I got to the light I found the watch was this one. As I never heard from the owners, I have kept it to compensate for the loss of mine." After which the waiter hurried over in response to six different signals.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Turkey Five Feet High.

John McCormick, a farmer who resides across the river from here in Illinois, is the owner of a turkey gobler which towers in the air five feet and weighs 65 pounds. It looks more like an ostrich than a turkey. Its legs at the feet are an inch and a half in diameter, while close to the body they are the same size of an ordinary man's arm at the elbow. The bird's wings measured seven feet from tip to tip.—Clinton, Ia., Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean.
